

Written History and Oral History

Written history creates a sense of distance, or passage of time.

800 years

Oral history brings the story to its listeners – the passage of time becomes relative to the listener (example: A long time ago means different things to different people). History exists around us.